(57) A track circuit comprises a rail area detached by means of insulated joints, to which the impedance bonds are connected, and to that signal coil, feeding sides are connected by means of cable cores. It also comprises matching transformer with feeding transformer connected thereto parallel, to which one side a filter is connected sequentially, which, in its turn, by means of: resistor, protector, safety filter, contacts of track relay and control transformer, is connected parallel to feeding transformer in coded signal current generator. The circuit also comprises a receiver connected by cable cores to feeding sides impedance bond signal coils; and on its feeding side, it additionally comprises second matching transformer, which primary coil is connected to control transformer through track relay normally closed contacts. A resonant filter is connected to second matching transformer secondary coil, and to coded signal current availability control relay, which in its turn is connected to filter output.
