5. Confirmation of Origin

The traceability of "Sazanos Kveli" shall be ensured at the stages of milking, cheese production, ripening, cutting, packaging and distribution.

For the purpose of ensuring traceability, a family production entity whose activities are related to any stage of the production of the protected geographical indication "Sazanos Kveli" shall be required to have appropriate information related to the stages of cheese production, ripening and placing on the market and to keep the relevant records.

6. Description of Production Process

In family production, cattle are milked in the morning and evening. The raw milk obtained is strained through a coarse cloth or 2–3 layers of gauze into a bucket or large clay pots. It is advisable to maintain the temperature of the freshly drawn milk.

Milk intended for the production of "Sazanos Kveli" shall be freshly drawn, unripened, unpasteurized, with an acidity within the range of 16–18°T. "Sazanos Kveli" belongs to the group of uncooked cheeses; it is removed by hand and is also referred to as "handmade cheese". Rennet (chymosin or pepsin), known locally as "cheese mother", is added to the freshly drawn and strained milk intended for coagulation at a temperature of 32–34°C, and the milk is stirred with a stick. Chymosin is prepared from the gastric mucosa of calves and lambs, while pepsin is prepared from the stomachs of adult ruminants and pigs. To maintain the temperature, the vessel containing the milk is placed near the fire. The normal milk coagulation process lasts 30–40 minutes. Completion of the coagulation process is determined by placing a hand on the resulting curd: if the coagulated mass does not adhere to the hand, the milk is considered coagulated. The resulting curd is cut with a stick in mutually perpendicular directions to obtain cubes measuring 10–15 mm. At the same time, the vessel containing the milk is placed on the stove and heated, while the mass is stirred and broken up by hand until cheese grains approximately the size of a hazelnut are obtained; this process lasts 20–30 minutes. The grains acquire the desired size, elasticity, firmness and moderate dryness. The finished grains are gradually gathered with both hands on one side of the vessel, and the rounded, ball-like cheese mass is removed, turned in the hands and moderately pressed so that moisture remains in the cheese mass. The drained, rounded and formed cheese wheel is placed in a clay or plastic bowl for self-pressing. The first turning is carried out after 10 minutes, the second after 30 minutes, and the third after another 30 minutes. Cheese made in the morning remains in the bowl at room temperature until evening. In the evening, coarse crystalline salt is sprinkled over the outer surface of the cheese wheel and rubbed in by hand. The cheese is left in the same bowl until morning and is then stored in a clay vessel in the brine (15–16%) formed from its own released salt and whey for no more than one week, after which the cheese is ready to be placed on the market.

7. Link With The Geographical Area

7.1 Natural Factor

One of the main activities of the population of the geographical area is the production of milk and "Sazanos Kveli", distinguished by its particular quality and characteristics. The distinctive qualities of the local cheese are attributable to such factors as the existing natural conditions, the endemic cattle breed and local experience in cheese production.

The local hayfields and pastures are characterized by various types of meadow vegetation, the species composition (clover, alfalfa, ryegrass, timothy grass, matitela, quail grass and urobalkhi) and nutritional value of which largely determine the distinctive qualities and popularity of cheese made from local milk. Until the onset of winter, cows feed on these grasses. In winter, locally produced maize straw is mainly used as feed, supplemented with hay made from the above-mentioned plants and crushed maize.

The quality of the local grass and, consequently, of the milk is determined both by the composition of the soils found in this area (humus-carbonate, brown, yellow and podzolic soils, etc.) and by the local humid subtropical climate. The distinctive qualities of "Sazanos Kveli" are also largely attributable to the endemic Georgian Mountain cattle breed, which has distinctive physiological characteristics and is well adapted to the local conditions and climate.

7.2 Human Factor

Based on centuries-old folk traditions, and unlike in the other regions of Imereti, the population of the specified geographical area developed an original technology for the production of "Sazanos Kveli", the particular features of which are as follows:

- "Sazanos Kveli" is produced from freshly drawn, unripened raw milk obtained from healthy cows of the endemic Georgian Mountain breed during the bactericidal phase, with an acidity ranging from 16–18°T, instead of the ripened milk with an acidity of 20–21°T used in the production of Imeretian cheese.
- "Sazanos Kveli" is produced exclusively in family production by a family production entity, on a non-industrial basis.
- "Sazanos Kveli" is made from milk that has not undergone heat treatment⁸, during which a number of bacteria beneficial to cheese production (for example, lactic acid bacteria) are destroyed and some of the native enzymes in milk (for example, lipases) are broken down. These contribute to the development of the characteristic taste and aroma of the cheese, which cannot be produced by the conventional addition of bacterial starter cultures to milk intended for cheese production⁹.

- The distinctive sensory properties of "Sazanos Kveli" ready for placing on the market are developed during a short-term ripening process (not exceeding one week), which, unlike that of Imeretian cheese, takes place exclusively in salt-whey brine, resulting in cheese with a relatively more yellow colour, a distinctly pleasant aroma and taste, and a delicate consistency¹⁰.

7.3 Reputation

"Sazanos Kveli" has been produced in Imereti for centuries. The distinctive character of "Sazanos Kveli" and the high demand for it led to the existence of a cheese market in the vicinity of this area. The agricultural products market, the so-called "market located near the Iron Bridge", was established in Upper Sazano in the 19th century, and cheese produced by the population of Sazano and the surrounding villages continues to be sold there to this day. "Sazanos Kveli" is distinguished by its taste characteristics and enjoys particular popularity in local cuisine. It should be noted that "Sazanos Kveli" is mainly consumed as fresh (chkinti) cheese for the preparation of the traditional Georgian dish – khachapuri.

It should be emphasized that "Sazanos Kveli" is referred to in a number of sources, including: based on expeditionary research conducted by "Origin Georgia" in 2016, "Sazanos Kveli", due to its recognition, was considered one of the important Georgian products with the potential for protection as a geographical indication¹¹; "Sazanos Kveli" is included in the "Atlas of Georgian Food Products Linked to Their Place of Origin"¹², developed within the framework of an internationally supported project; furthermore, "Sazanos Kveli" is described in the Catalogue¹³ of Georgian Traditional Dairy Products.

A number of television reports have also been dedicated to the distinctive character of "Sazanos Kveli": "Sazanos Kveli – Expedition to Imereti"¹⁴, "Sazano-Imeretian Cheese, Khachapuri Baked in a Tone Oven and Ekala; Good Morning Georgia"¹⁵.
